3.3.4 Sexual and reproductive health care services for students

The University provides students with access to free and confidential sexual and reproductive health care services through its on-campus health and medical facilities. Students can approach qualified health professionals for counselling, preventive care, health guidance, and medical support related to sexual and reproductive health. The services are provided in a safe, respectful, and confidential environment, ensuring that students can seek appropriate assistance whenever required.

The University also conducts awareness programmes, health education sessions, and sensitization activities to promote knowledge of sexual health, reproductive health, personal hygiene, and preventive care among students. These initiatives encourage students to make informed and responsible decisions regarding their health and well-being. Through accessible healthcare services and awareness activities, the University promotes a healthy, inclusive, supportive, and informed campus community.
